I remember the day he was born because I was only 4 1/2 months away from turning 6yrs old. He was so cute with a full head of black hair. Then through the many years of watching him grow and caring for him I had to let go. We grew into adulthood and he became his own Man. As we journeyed through our lives we always stayed in touch and he often made me laugh. Though many new him he often showed me his softer side guess because I tried to listen and put my thoughts aside. Then the day he told me he was having Kidney failure our whole relationship became more profound and I found myself feeling like time was running out but now I know he needed to go and so the last hours of the day he was ready he did not say good-bye as he normally did but that he loved me and would see me later and so I said the same. Oh my sweet little brother I think you knew and its okay but I will always miss you till we meet again. All My Love your Sis Annie
