It has been a long time since I got to visit with Barbara. We are first cousins, and through the years have not gotten to get together often. We had such a good time when we were young and I could go spend the night with her and her family. My fond memories of her include riding a horse across the railroad track to South Park Cemetery and looking at the flowers and graves. They lived on a dairy in what is now Brookside, so it was quite a ride. Also we would sneak a ride on some of the cows they milked(when her folks didn't see us, since that was a no no). We would sit and play battle (card game) at night while Uncle Patsy listened to the radio that was on a table in the corner. That was the 30's and there were no T Vs. It was such fun back then. I am so sorry that this is so late, but because of the storm I knew through Pearland relatives that they could not bury her until after the storm. We were displaced for about 2 weeks during the flooding after the storm and then I was not able to come to the services due to my husband's poor mental capacity. I would love to be able to talk with Cissie or John to express my sympathy.Evelyn Valigura Thompson

Barbara Lee Maynor was the chef of all the good stuff when my folks had me on a diet. She was the safe haven when I ran away from home in my teenage years and even in my early adult years. She was the driver when her daughter and I thought we should go interview one of the bullfighters performing in the Astrodome. Very few moms would allow such a harebrained idea, much less participate in the process. But that was just Barbara. The woman who understood that kids will be pretty crazy, a little risky, and a lot adventurous. She allowed us to test the limits of our abilities and didn't seem to let on if we were also testing the limits of her patience. She taught me that raising children is about letting them spread their wings and fly. Now it's your turn Barbara. Spread your wings and fly. God speed.
