He was my first love of my life. We met at Piccadilly he worked in the back where all the cooking was done and I worked up front waiting on tables but I could find reasons to go to the back where he was. we both would have big smiles for each other which made it going back to well worth it. He was the greatest father to our daughter Diane. she couldn't do no wrong as far he was concerned. Even though he loved motorcycles, he loved his daughter Diane more and he made it clear. The best father without trying. I'll always remember that to this date.

Dad always called me "wiggle butt" when he would take me riding on his motorcycle. My little butt would slide all over the seat of that big ol' motorcycle as my arms wrapped around him. I'll always be your "wiggle butt".

Pamela Harris lit a candle in honor of Royal.

We walked past the Chuckwagon on Wayside on our way to and from elementary school (Henderson). Sometimes when we had turned in soda bottles we had enough money to get a cherry coke to share on the way home.

My fondest memory is all his stories he would tell me, it was always something new and interesting. I would always think to myself after each story that he could write a book about his life and I bet everyone would enjoy that book. He was always full of joy and would make everyone around him smile. One thing I will always remember about him is how he would always say " let's play it by ear", and it made me laugh each time. I will carry his stories and the lessons he taught me like what not to do when on a motorcycle, with me forever.
